Sadia Anwar

has completed the 2.5 ECTS PhD course

"Professional Communication, spring 2"

Spring, 2016

Description: The course took both a theoretical and a practical approach. The theoretical approach by conceptualising the planning, presentation and evaluation processes emphasising the communicative aspects. The practical approach by training the oral communication in a video laboratory where the participants were asked to make a presentation of both a self-selected subject and a self-selected situation. The course was organised in three parts: First, the participants were asked to prepare a presentation. Second, there was a presentation of concepts at the seminar followed by the video laboratory. Third, at the end of the seminar the participants were asked to set up a personal plan for improvement. Before the course started, the participants received a collection of relevant papers. The issues raised in this course were not subject-based but participant-based on a general level for scientific communication. PhD students from other faculties and universities could benefit from attending the course.

Objectives: The objective was to train and improve the participants' skills in oral communication especially at scientific conferences and in university teaching.
